Between 1972 and 1977, 28 patients with large operable and 8 patients with inoperable squamous cell carcinoma of the oesophagus were treated by preoperative irradiation. The treatment given was a combination of irradiation and cis-diamminedichloroplatinum (CDDP) (1 mg/kg for the first cycle and 2 mg/kg for each consecutive cycle). The overall response rate was 35.7% (27.1% in the inoperable group and 50.0% in the operable group), the 3-year survival rate was 28.6% and the mean survival time was 14.8 months. No patient with a response (CR or PR) survived for 5 years or more. The mean survival time of patients with CR or PR was 35.7 months.Elevated levels of circulating pro-inflammatory cytokines are reported in patients with schizophrenia. For example, elevated levels of interleukin-6 (IL-6), interferon-gamma (IFN- γ), and IL-1 β have been reported in the blood of patients with schizophrenia. In addition, anti-inflammatory agents, such as glucocorticoids and benzodiazepines, have been found to be less effective in schizophrenia than in depression, suggesting that the immune system is altered in patients with schizophrenia. It has been suggested that antipsychotic agents, such as clozapine, may inhibit the inflammatory response and thereby have therapeutic benefits. However, clozapine is not effective in all patients with schizophrenia and can produce severe side effects in a sub
